800 Welfare Jobs To Be Prized Plums For Next Governor

*Delay of Civil Service Examination
Favors New Executive; Deen's Son,
14, and Sister on Pay Roll.*

By LUKE GREENE.

Continued postponement of civil service examinations for employees of the State Welfare Department yesterday gave rise to political predictions that Georgia's next governor will have approximately 800 jobs in the welfare department for distribution to his friends after he takes office January 1.

Observers explained it would be to the advantage of the new governor for the examinations to be postponed until the first of the year. Distribution of the choice political plums would not be possible if the merit system were put into effect immediately.

There has been considerable delay in setting up the machinery for the merit system, it was pointed out. No definite date has been set for the examinations to start, although S. E. Harrick was appointed supervisor of examinations last February.

Would Retain Jobs.

The new crop of employees under the new administration would have to stand the examinations, even though the tests were postponed, but it was pointed out that most of them probably would make a passing grade and thus retain their new positions.

Officials of Hamrick's office said yesterday that the job classification data, which sets up the qualifications necessary for each job in the welfare department, had been sent to the printer. Some criticism has been found with the classification plan because some jobs with apparently the least qualifications called for higher salaries than others with more rigid requirements.

Charges Against Deen.

Meanwhile, an investigation disclosed that Braswell Deen, welfare director, has two members of his immediate family on the pay roll of the welfare department in Atlanta.

One of the speakers at a political rally in Warm Springs Saturday charged that when Deen came out of the race for governor he put his organization on the welfare pay roll.

Deen's 14-year-old son, Braswell Deen Jr., is working at a salary of $90 per month. He is a clerk in the mail room of the welfare forces.

Miss Lola Mae Deen, the director's sister, is on the stenographic staff of the old-age assistance division and is also receiving a salary of approximately $90 per month.

Anticipated Revenue.

Miller estimated that contracts let since June 30, 1940, plus the balance of the 1939 federal aid program not yet advertised, "will bring the anticipation of revenue to more than $14,000,000."

"This," he said in a statement submitted to Commissioners L. L. Patten and Herman Watson, "is more than the maximum amount this department can anticipate receiving net from gasoline tax during our next (1940-41) fiscal year, which leaves no provision made for necessary maintenance and repairs to the highway system during the fiscal year."

(Note: Records of the highway department showed that Miller's statement was submitted to the board at a called meeting July 13, but was never made public. Secretary Sam Boykin explained this was because the minutes of the session were not yet approved by board members Patten and Watson.)

The chairman estimated the department would receive about $13,907,000 from gasoline taxes in the current fiscal year. He asserted at least $2,000,000 would be added to the listed obligations for ordinary repairs, maintenance and administration.

Income from motor vehicle tags—estimated at about $1,850,000—is allocated to rural and post roads, he said, and would not be available to pay the regular highway department obligations.

Miller Charges Roads' Deficit Is $12,715,880

'Enormous' Purchases, 'Abnormal Expansion' of Workers Cited.

By The Associated Press.

Chairman W. L. Miller, of the State Highway Board, charged yesterday the department had accumulated a deficit of $12,715,880.61, principally for purchase of "enormous quantities" of road-building machinery and "abnormal expansion" of asphalt forces and state convict forces.

The slender chairman, who was ousted by Governor Rivers last December and reinstated under supreme court decree in May, said unpaid obligations carried over from the last fiscal year included $2,641,655.15 for road-building machinery—"more machinery than was bought in the preceding 10 years"—and approximately $7,000,000 for operations of asphalt forces and state convict forces.

"These two departments alone," he said, "spent approximately $7,000,000 in the last fiscal year, whereas the budget appropriation July 1, 1939, was $450,000 for convict forces and $500,000 for state asphalt forces, it being anticipated that the asphalt forces would engage in resurfacing and repair of slippery roads and not in outright construction. A conservative estimate is that in excess of 80 percent of this expenditure of these departments went for machinery, sand asphalt and other materials."

Anticipated Revenue.

Miller estimated that contracts let since June 30, 1940, plus the balance of the 1939 federal aid program not yet advertised, "will bring the anticipation of revenue to more than $14,000,000."

Counsel Clash Marks Opening Of Peek Case

Court Will Start Hearing Evidence in Chappell Trial Today.

By WILLARD COPE,
Staff Writer.

MARIETTA, Ga., July 29.—Two minor demonstrations of mettle by defense and state counsel marked the slowly paced and sweltering opening day of 22-year-old Bill Chappell's trial in superior court here today on a charge of slaying J. Ed Peek Jr., road machinery salesman, June 21, 1938.

The defense, through Attorney John Wood, of Canton, former judge, somewhat caustically inquired into the employment of Marietta's Mayor L. M. Blair to assist the prosecution. Later Blair led an attack of implication upon the impartiality of a prospective juror, John A. Heck, state highway commissioner in the Tammany administration, whom Solicitor General Grady Vandiviere, leading the prosecution, finally excused from service in an acrid voice.

On Trial Alone.

Chappell went to trial alone, although jointly accused with him, both in the killing of Peek and his wife, are Jason Clark and Lewis Turner, Carroll county ex-convicts, and John Holmsback, former inmate of the same county's almshouse.

In midafternoon Judge J. Harold Hawkins, of the Blue Ridge circuit, presiding, found it necessary to draw 17 additional talesmen, five panels having been exhausted in obtaining 10 jurors.

Within an hour and 48 minutes after a new panel of 16 talesmen had been called a jury was selected.

Those on the jury are: W. F. Farmer, Marietta; W. L. King, Post Oak; Hubbard Rakestraw, Powder Springs; Horace C. Grant, Fullers; F. T. Daniell, Coxes; W. W. Weeks, Kennesaw; E. W. Brumbebow, Powder Springs; F. Moon, Powder Springs; E. W. Bannister, Merritts; M. H. Reese.

The chairman estimated the department would receive about $13,907,000 from gasoline taxes in the current fiscal year. He asserted at least $2,000,000 would be added to the listed obligations for ordinary repairs, maintenance and administration.

Income from motor vehicle tags—estimated at about $1,850,000—is allocated to rural and post roads, he said, and would not be available to pay the regular highway department obligations.

Argentina Hedges on Pact To Resist Foreign Threats

Leaves Door Open To Back Out of Agreement as 21 American Republics Approve Program at Havana Conference.

HAVANA, July 29.—(AP)—Argentina hedged tonight on the important American foreign ministers' conference agreement on treatment of foreign possessions in America by making a reservation to its signature of the "Act of Havana."

Members of the Argentine delegation said that any signature put on the document here would have to be approved finally by the government in Buenos Aires.

Although they said the matter was merely an "academic question," the fact was that Argentina, by making the reservation, left the door open to back out of an agreement that had been accepted by other nations as the most important continental defense measure ever taken in a Pan-American conference.

In making the reservation some of the Argentine delegates said they did not want to take any action that would indicate a desire to take authority that rightfully belonged to congress.

Keeps Her Promise.

In making the reservation at the last minute, Argentina kept her pre-convention promise not to sign any binding agreements at this conference.

The diplomatic maneuver was executed so smoothly that many persons attending the conference did not immediately see the importance of it.

At a private plenary session which concluded their work except for a public session tomorrow for formal signatures, the ministers approved a program embracing the most far-reaching measures ever enacted at a Pan-American gathering.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull, weary from long hours of persuasion and argument to satisfy objections raised chiefly by Argentina, was happy over what sources close to him described as substantial success of the United States in welding the American nations into a closer-knit group to face perils lying ahead in a war-disrupted world.

Three main United States objectives were accomplished in the tedious negotiations, although the documents emerged in language

U. S. Refuses To Deal With Japan in China

This Country Still Opposed to Britain's Closing Burma Road.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—(AP)—The United States let it be known today that it was as opposed as ever to Britain's closing of the Burma road, major supply route for the Chinese army.

Summer Welles, acting secretary of state, made it plain also that any negotiations toward relinquishing this government's special rights in China would be with the legitimate and recognized government of China—not with Japan or a puppet state set up by Tokyo.

2. A program for economic protection and development designed both to relieve existing distress resulting from the loss of European markets and to build an American trade system strong enough to enable any of the republics to turn their backs on foreign powers that seek to dictate terms and methods contrary to a policy of liberal trade.

3. A broadside attack by all the republics in union on "fifth column" activities by which some foreign powers were declared to be seeking to undermine existing governments and create new ones more favorable to their political systems.

Similar to Notes.

An expression of the attitude of all the ratifying nations, the "Act of Havana" contains language strikingly similar to recent United States notes to Germany and Italy declaring that the United States could not recognize or acquiesce in any attempt to transfer or acquire territories or sovereign rights in American territories.

The "Act of Havana" provides that the republics may establish "regions of provisional administration" in any areas now held by non-American nations in the event they are in danger of becoming the subject matter of exchange of territories or sovereignty.

At the same time any of the 21 governments was left free to stand aside from actual measures taken to carry out the policy.

The "provisional administration" may be put into effect by any one or any group of the American nations if the emergency is too great to permit consultation among all members, but would be established only on the understanding that when the emergency has passed the affected regions would be returned to their original status or regulated into autonomous territories.

This government is willing to undertake negotiations with the legitimate and recognized government of China. Welles declared, for the relinquishment of its extra-territorial rights.

Controlled by Japan.

The reporter said his editor had pointed out that Japan controlled practically all of the Chinese territory in which the United States exercises special rights, and had said that Japan's "puppet ruler" in China was consequently the only one with whom the United States could negotiate to relinquish those rights. Saying the editor thought it looked like this country was "getting ready to back down too," the reporter asked Welles to explain just what he had meant by his previous statement.

The impression was general among military observers that, as soon as the operations in northern France have reached what Chancellor Hitler and the German high command consider perfection of advance preparations, and when the weather is satisfactory, an attack on England may be expected at any time.

Enemy Aircraft Use Red Cross Disguise, Says British Protest

80 German Bombers, Fighters Dive on City 22 Miles From French Coast; 23 Craft Downed.

By The Associated Press.

Adolf Hitler hurled his greatest aerial thunderbolt against Dover, nearest British port to France and the logical debarkation point for any invading force, in a day-long series of savage attacks which cost him upwards of 23 planes yesterday. Witnesses to the battles high in the clouds said German planes were "falling like autumn leaves."

The air ministry reported that two German seaplanes which were marked with a Red Cross were shot down Sunday. British officials charging that Germany was using planes with these markings for "valuable reconnaissances" and for general communications work. Earlier this month two other German planes, each said to be using the Red Cross markings, were forced down, the air ministry said.

In view of this the British government sent a note through proper channels to be transmitted to the German and Italian governments, warning that such ships entering in war zones will do so "at their own risk and peril."

80 Planes in Attack.

For an explosive half-hour wave upon wave of dive bombers and fighters—80 in all—blasted at the channel port of Dover, only 22 miles from the French coast and possible initial objective in the first major invasion attempted against England in 847 years. British fighters, long-awaiting just such a mass attack, swarmed into the skies to tangle with the attackers. Official figures placed the bag of Nazi craft downed in this engagement at 20, but unofficially the total was given as 23.

Troop trains and naval forces were reported to be massed in and near the major ports along the north coast of France. In addition, it was reported that "preparatory" action was noticeable to a depth of 100 miles inland.

Supporting Services. Within that belt, across the channel from England, were said to be massed all the supporting services and materials needed for operations which appeared imminent.

Thus "vast preparations for an attack on the British Isles appeared to be nearing a peak," the travelers said.

Certain zones were closed to French civilians, but in most places those who remained in their homes during the German occupation were not interfered with by the movements.

The flow of returning refugees had been checked to avoid cluttering roads and railroads. In order to keep the military dispositions secret, the Germans were moving troops, heavy guns and other materials only at night.

From dusk to dawn the roads were alive with military operations, it was said.

Fleet Moves In. German naval forces were reported to have moved into the French northern ports. They consisted chiefly of torpedo boats and destroyers from the Baltic fleet and hundreds of torpedo-carrying motorboats.

The torpedo-carrying motorboats were said to be active on that portion of the Channel coast between Calais and Le Havre.

German submarines also were reported to be operating in the Channel and North Sea from new bases in France, Belgium and Holland, accounting for the increasingly heavy toll on British shipping recently.

The impression was general among military observers that, as soon as the operations in northern France have reached what Chancellor Hitler and the German high command consider perfection of advance preparations, and when the weather is satisfactory, an attack on England may be expected at any time.

Thermometers will climb today for the tenth consecutive day, the United States Weather Bureau forecast last night, with 95 expected mid-afternoon.

July 20 the mercury began the climb when it hit 89, and then rose to 92 for the next four days. On the 25th it jumped a 93, and on the 26th, 27th and 28th reached 94 for the hottest weather of the season.

Britain Calls For Tokyo 'Spy' Death Probe

Suicide Doubts, Japan's 'Espionage Network' Charges Challenged.

TOKYO, July 30.—(AP)—Great Britain has demanded a full investigation into the death of Melville James Cox, veteran English newspaperman who, Japanese said, committed suicide after his arrest on espionage charges, reliable sources disclosed yesterday.

Britain also has called for substantiation of charges of a British "espionage network" operating in Japan following Tokyo's action in rounding up several prominent British businessmen.

Japanese officials said Cox, a Reuters correspondent, dodged his guards and hurled himself through a second-story window of the police headquarters while being questioned.

British officials were not inclined to accept a purported farewell note Cox was reported to have left.

The police confiscated all of Cox's office records.

Friends said Cox, a far eastern correspondent for 10 years, was planning to retire shortly and live permanently in Japan.

Regarding the arrest of other Britons, a Japanese foreign office statement said:

"In view of the ever-increasing activities of foreign organs of espionage conspiracy in this country lately, the military police under the direction of the prosecutors, arrested as a first step July 27 those constituting part of the British espionage network covering the entire country."

Shanghai reports said 11 Britons were under arrest.

Nazis' Phantom Contracts Upset South America

Survey Fails To Disclose Any Who Saw Deliver-or-Pay Offer.

Buenos Aires, July 29.—(AP)—Stories of German offers to sign contracts for October delivery of goods to South America, with heavy self-imposed penalties provided for failure to comply, fall into that category of things that everybody talks about but nobody will acknowledge he has actually experienced.

Yet the talk goes on, in every level of Argentine commerce, with the purported German offers accepted as fact and thus having their powerful effect.

A thorough survey has failed to locate a single merchant who will say he has signed such a German agreement or has even seen one, with the exception of a few German-owned subsidiaries which are in effect selling to themselves.

Yet many Argentine businessmen are hesitant to make their usual contracts in the United States or elsewhere.

A representative of one North American steel company made what amounted to a door-to-door survey.

"I was not able to find any company in Buenos Aires which had been offered steel on delivery-or-penalty terms," he declared, adding that some German firms here had bought steel in the United States to complete construction projects.

Informed sources in Brazil said Germans in that country had bought steel, chemicals and sewing machines in the United States to meet their deliveries, and related that at least one lot of United States manufactured steel was marketed under a German company's trade name.

Ranee of Sarawak To Lecture in U. S.

AN EASTERN CANADIAN PORT, July 29.—(AP)—The Ranee of Sarawak, en route to New York "on a good-will tour" and a hoped-for interview with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt on the plan for removing children from the British Isles, arrived today on a refugee ship.

"What Canada and America have done for us in Britain is terrific," she said, "and I am going to lecture, expressing my appreciation for it."

The Ranee hopes later to visit her husband, Sir Charles Viner Brooke, the White Rajah of Sarawak, a British-protected state in Borneo.

Germany Gives Rumania Time To Cede Land

Carol Must Settle Dispute by September 15 or Axis Steps In.

BUCHAREST, July 29.—(AP)—Germany has given Rumania until September 15 to settle her territorial differences with Hungary and Bulgaria by direct negotiation, it was reported tonight in authorized quarters.

If there is no agreement then, it was said, the Axis powers plan to step in and impose their own settlement.

Other than expressing satisfaction with the outcome of the Salzburg conference with Hitler, Prime Minister Ion Gheorghe and Foreign Minister Mihail Manolescu made no public comment. They reported direct to King Carol.

However, Julius Maniu, leader of Rumania's powerful Peasant party, opposed any further ceding of territory. He said that the real strength of Rumania's position is Germany's desire to keep war out of the Balkans at all costs.

FIGHTING DAYS RECALLED—War-time memories of twenty years ago were being refreshed last night when Major Trammell Scott (left) and Henri Laussucq, now a noted New York artist, drew of the then Captain Scott after a balloon ascension in which Scott was scared out of his wits by a Boche plane attack.

Trammell Scott Host to French World War Vet

Atlanta and Artist Who Fought Side by Side Recall Experiences.

BY HAROLD MARTIN.

Out at Trammell Scott's house last night they sang an old song and they told an old tale. The song was probably "Mademoiselle From Armentières," discreetly censored, and the tales were not one, but many—of the days when Henri Laussucq was a young French sergeant and Trammell Scott was a captain of infantry and French and Yank together faced the Hun before the battles of Verdun.

Henri Laussucq is bald now, and a little thick about the waist. And Trammell Scott has got more gray in his hair than he had then. They might not have even known each other had they met on the street, and the story of their getting together this time is pretty interesting in itself.

It starts one night a few weeks ago when Trammell Scott was reading in the American Legion monthly a story by some old soldier of the French army. And he came to a line which said "In July of 1918 I was assigned to the 328th Infantry of the 82d Division as an Division as an interpreter." When Scott read that something rang like a bell in his brain. He turned back to the beginning of the piece and read the by-line, which he hadn't noticed. It said "By Henri Laussucq."

Here for Visit.

And that's why, after 20 years, they got together again. Correspondence started and the upshot of it was that Henri Laussucq, his wife and his niece arrived last night to stay awhile with the Scotts.

The talk started immediately—always beginning "Do you remember—"

There was the time for instance when the old 328th was getting short of food, the supply trains somehow having failed to come up. And here was this little interpreter, who one night came to Captain Scott and said, sort of shyly and diffidently and not very convincingly: "You provide for me a motorcycle with a sidecar, captain, and I think I bring you back some food."

Well, it was a long shot, but worth trying. So Henri Laussucq trundled off into the warm French night with an American motorcycle and side car, leaving Trammell Scott not knowing whether he was going AWOL or where.

Infantry Hero.

But before long he came trundling back, smiling blandly, with the sidecar piled high. There were eggs. There were chickens. There was bottle after bottle of good red wine and the long hard-crusted loaves of the good French bread.

From that time on Henri Laussucq was the hero of the 328th Infantry.

That was just the beginning of the remembering. There was the time, for instance, that Trammell Scott decided he'd go up in a balloon, just for the experience. So he went up and had himself quite a time, perching around at this and that. Until out of the cloud there came what looked first like a wasp and then turned out to be a Boche fighting ship that buzzed around the balloon and laced the air between basket and bag with incendiary bullets.

"Jump," the balloon officer yelled to Scott as the anti-aircraft guns began to thunder from the ground. Scott got one leg over the side of the basket—and then looked down. That other foot he couldn't lift to save his soul. They say he still was standing that way, half in, half out, when the frantic ground crew finally cranked the big bag down to safety while booming arches drove the attacking plane away.

Henri Laussucq immortalized that little martial side-gleam in a water-color that hangs on Trammell Scott's wall today.

Fine Artist.

For the Frenchman was an artist and a fine one—so good, in fact, that he is today the art director of a famous American advertising agency, and belongs to all the associations and societies of artists which New York affords.

He came out of the war a hero, with a chest full of medals and five citations for gallantry in action. He came to New York in 1920 and has lived there ever since.

He went back home last year to see his son. And while he was there the word came that young Marcel Laussucq must report to his regiment up in the line. There was a long night of talk, that last night they had together, and perhaps a little wine was drunk, in toasts to la belle France. Then they went up together to the fighting line, the old soldier of France and his son. And there they said goodbye.

That was a year ago. For a while there were letters. In the past three months there has been no word.

The old soldier has not lost hope—for his son, or for France.

France, he says, and his voice rings with conviction, is not the France of Petain and Laval. France is the France of Marcel Laussucq, and millions like him, sons of fighting sires whose spirit cannot die.

It flames still in Henri Laussucq. There is an organization in this country of which he is one of the founders. Its purpose is to keep alive the things that France has stood for, that all Frenchmen have ever held most dear.

Its name is "France Forever."

Court To Try French Chiefs For War Guilt

Decree Submitted to Petain; Mandel Faces Death Penalty.

VICHY, France, July 29.—(UP)—A decree creating a high court to try at least eight former cabinet ministers on charges of bringing about France's military disaster was submitted to Marshal Petain's council of ministers today.

The decree, prepared by Minister of Justice Raphael Albert, creates a high court to fix the "war guilt" of the French leaders.

At least one of the accused, former Minister of Interior Georges Mandel, may face the death penalty on charges of "reasonably negotiating" with the British after France's decision to surrender. Others may be sentenced to life imprisonment.

No official list of persons to be arraigned has been announced but is certain to include: Former Premier Daladier, former Premier Reynaud, former Navy Minister Campinchi, former Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos, General Maurice Gamelin, former Premier and Socialist Leader Leon Blum, Mandel, and former Air Minister Pierre Cot.

Camp Gordon Airport Plan Advances Step

Scott Candler, Hugh Burgess Confer With WPA Engineers.

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS, Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Proposed establishment of an aviation training field at Camp Gordon, Georgia, advanced a step nearer reality today following a conference here between DeKalb county officials and Works Projects Administration engineers.

Representing the county were Scott Candler, commissioner, and Hugh Burgess, DeKalb city attorney, who presented maps and statistics supporting their year-old effort to convert a 328-acre tract on the camp for an aviation training field and for use of private airplanes, thereby relieving Candler field. Cost of the development is estimated at $375,000.

The proposed project already has approval of the Georgia WPA office and tentative approval of the War Department as part of the national defense program, Mr. Candler said.

WPA decision on the request of DeKalb county for construction of a $700,000 water system is expected within the near future, Mr. Candler said. It is anticipated that announcement would be made through the office of Malcolm Miller, regional WPA representative at Atlanta.

British Patrol Guards in West Indies

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, July 29.—(P)—A $250,000,000 cache of gold bars was reported today to be the primary reason for a British naval patrol off the French island of Martinique.

The island has been watched by the British ever since the fall of France, for fear the gold as well as aircraft aboard French ships there might fall into German hands.

Martinique and the other French colonies in the West Indies were described today as hopeful the Pan-American conference at Havana would result in United States protection for them.

Counsel Clash Marks Opening Of Peek Case

Powder Springs; W. A. Maxham, Austell, and P. J. Annandale, Marietta. The trial will proceed at 8 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Sixteen talesmen disqualify themselves by expressing conscientious objection to capital punishment. Three jurors were obtained from the first panel, two from the second, one from the third, three from the fourth and one from the fifth.

Leading the defense of the somewhat pale, but obviously powerful son of Carroll county's Commissioner W. Hamp Chappell, is Willis Smith, of Carrollton. Active also are James V. Carmichael, of Marietta, and members of the Carrollton law firm of Boykin & Boykin.

Wood's questions about Mayor Blair's employment brought out that he had been retained by Mrs. J. E. Coursey, of College Park, mother of the late Mrs. Peek, who had been strangled by a five-foot length of rope at the time her husband was slain with hammer blows. Any outside donation to the fee paid Blair was denied.

Blair spiritedly sought later to show Heck had been active in behalf of the defense, questioning him about specific persons and instances, but the former commissioner blandly was unable to recall having discussed the case with anyone very much since he was called as a talesman for this term of court.

Start Delayed.

From the large crowd which gathered even before the entrances to the courtroom were unlocked, it was clear that a cause celebre was about to reach its long awaited climax. Even so, there was much delay in getting started.

Several panels of talesmen were called into the jury box, examined en bloc and given the oath in a picturesque manner, the prospective jurors, facing each other in fours and fives, jointly clasped three worn court Bibles.

Then Solicitor General Vandiviere went into a whispered conference with his aides, Mayor Blair and George D. Anderson, former solicitor, over lists of prosecution witnesses.

Several names were called aloud without eliciting response, and Vandiviere revealed that three witnesses, whom he termed very material, were absent. They were listed as Arthur Brewer, one of the men who discovered the bodies in the 70-foot railroad cut, three miles northeast of Austell; Hamp Riggs and Mrs. Ollie Pressley, of Newman, the nature of whose expected testimony never has been disclosed by the prosecution.

Witness III.

Mrs. Pressley had telegraphed she was too ill to attend, but opening of the trial first was delayed for an hour and then until 1 o'clock to permit a doctor to examine her.

There were very few women in the courtroom. Those in whom interest centered were the pretty blonde and blue-eyed Helen Peek, daughter of the slain road machinery salesman, and Dorothy Chappell, dark-haired sister of Bill, near whom she sat at the defense table.

No Greeting.

Helen Peek was seated across the courtroom, just beyond the prosecution table and almost opposite Chappell. She wore an attractive black and white costume, with a white turban, and was wholly calm. Although she formerly had been manager of Chappell's bowling alley here and closely associated with him, they did not appear to greet each other.

Engineer To End 50 Years' Service

When the Southern railroad's crack Ponce de Leon eases to a stop at 11 o'clock this morning in the Terminal station, it will bring to a close the 50-year career of the oldest engineer in point of service this side of Chattanooga.

He is Guy H. Conley, 69, of 31 Moreland avenue, who entered railroading exactly a half century ago today as a fireman for the old Atlanta and Fort Valley road. He began with the Southern more than 40 years ago.

For 28 years he was at the throttle of Southern fast freight trains, advancing to passenger trains 12 years ago. He has been hauling the Ponce de Leon for the past three years.

Nazis' Planes Open Savage War on Dover

led many Britons to believe Hitler would not be long in launching his threatened frontal assault against Britain—the first since the legions of William the Conqueror successfully invaded this island kingdom in 1066.

Britain's air victory was offset somewhat by the announcement of the sinking of the destroyer Wren, 28th destroyer casualty of the war, by a Nazi air bomb.

Planes Blown to Pieces.

The Dover area, where the air ministry said British fighters shot down 15 of 80 German attackers in a single, 30-minute engagement, bore the brunt of the day's onslaught.

"German machines were falling like autumn leaves," one eyewitness reported. "Fragments of German planes, some blown to pieces by direct hits on their bomb racks, came down literally in showers.

"People who should have been in shelter stood transfixed. The fighters, darting back and forth from behind the clouds, were so high they were only tiny specks."

"The dramatic moment came when two German machines came down together, belching smoke and flame as they grew larger and finally plunged into the water, sending up tremendous twin geyser of water.

"Almost immediately another ship slid, swerved out of control and skinned over the rooftops. It righted itself just in time.

It turned out to be a British fighter and the crowd returned the gunner's wave with thunderous cheers."

Eight bombers and seven fighters out of 50 Stukas and 30 escorting Messerschmitts were bagged and marked with a Red Cross.

One bomber was downed over the south of England in a before-dawn attack.

Slashing back at the Germans, the air ministry reported 17 Nazi airfields in Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium and northern France and docks in Germany were bombed during the night. Three British craft failed to return.

In its communiqué dealing with Sunday's air warfare, the German high command reported 11 British planes shot down to Germany's two.

Yesterday's bag of German planes brought Britain's official count of invading craft down by home defenses to 318, to 244 since the first mass German raid June 18.

The admiralty's account of the Wren's loss said the 1,200-ton destroyer was hit squarely by a bomb. It did not disclose the loss of life. The Wren carried a normal complement of 134 officers and men.

African Battles Rage.

Britain has been turning out destroyer replacements at a pace described as more than replacing the losses. She started the war with 179 destroyers.

Britain traded aerial blows with Italy in the Mediterranean.

The Italians bombed the island fortress of Malta in five weekend attacks which the British said caused one civilian casualty and slight damage. Four raiders were downed.

Total Italian losses in the Maltese attacks were announced officially at 25 planes to Britain's one.

A British communiqué from Nairobi, Kenya, told of heavy casualties inflicted on Italians by British bombers at Moyale, captured recently by Premier Mussolini's troops after a long siege.

In the western desert, along the Libyan-Egyptian frontier, a British patrol was attacked by low-flying Italian planes far behind the enemy lines, resulting in it had been used as a communication aircraft by Major General Tittel, commander of an infantry division, and also that it had been used to make bogus war films for the general war news service.

"In view of this His Majesty's government caused the following communication to be made through the proper channels for transmission to the German and Italian governments.

Planes Warned.

"It has come to the notice of His Majesty's government that enemy aircraft . . . are being employed for purposes which His Majesty's government cannot regard as being consistent with the privileges generally accorded to the Red Cross.

"His Majesty's government desire to accord to ambulance aircraft reasonable facilities for the transportation of the sick and wounded in accordance with the Red Cross convention. His Majesty's government is unable, however, to grant immunity to such aircraft flying over areas in which operations are in progress. Ambulance aircraft which do not comply with the above requirements will do so at their own risk and peril."

Store Damaged By Explosion In Milwaukee

Sears, Roebuck Manager Receives Note Demanding $100,000.

MILWAUKEE, July 29.—(AP)—Twenty-four hours after Rowland H. Davie, manager, received an extortion note demanding $100,000, a small bomb exploded in a Sears, Roebuck & Company store last Wednesday, police revealed today.

Damage was slight, but the note promised "bombs 200 times larger will go off at your south and north side stores besides your own life will be in danger if you fail."

A heavy guard has been placed around all company stores in the city.

The note demanded that Davie place $100,000 in used money of $5, $10 and $20 denominations in a "good and strong bag" and drop it from an airplane. He was to receive later instructions as to where to fly.

Police secretary permitted the extortionists to make a second contact by telephone Friday night. Mrs. Davie told police a man with a slight foreign accent told her: "Tell Mr. Davie Joe cannot make it tonight. Will tomorrow night at the same time." Then the man hung up instantly. They have made no move since, police said.

Surgeons Operate Upon Chamberlain

LONDON, July 29.—(AP)—Former Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain underwent a successful abdominal operation tonight, it was reported.

The operation was for relief of intestinal symptoms of an obstructive nature, they said, and his condition is "satisfactory."

It is anticipated that Mr. Chamberlain will be able to return to his office in two or three weeks, a statement said.

The tall, 71-year-old predecessor of Winston Churchill as Britain's war prime minister has been a chronic sufferer from gout.

Dangerous Complacency

Probably the most dangerous thing floating about in the United States today is complacency.

It is now making a reappearance, and, like most reappearances, is dangerous but pitiful (we might take Dempsey as an example—his fist is dangerous yet; the rest is pitiful).

Why complacency today? There is a lull in the European fighting. This country has voted vast sums for rearmament. But is that enough? The quiet in Europe is a pregnant lull; much the same as one would experience in the epicenter of a hurricane. Some skillfully optimistic statements have indicated tremendous strides in rearmament. They still are paper strides, however. There is a general reaction—repulsion—against thoughts of war. So, complacency.

Because this is becoming more and more true, take a look at the other side of the fence. Hitler has said he is going to invade England, and thus far similar promises of invasion are the only ones he has kept. The wishful thinkers lean to the opposite side of the boat, just as they did when they said Hitler wouldn't try the Maginot line or invade Belgium. And, too, recall also that rumors of disagreement in the German general staff are generally followed by a very disagreeable time for someone else.

England has not yet been invaded, but the threat is no idle gesture. Neither are the increasing British aerial raids and naval bombardments of coastal Europe idle gestures. The machinery of invasion has been massed and it is against this machinery the British raids have more and more been centered.

America knows, today, that a successful invasion of England will be followed by trouble in South America and will bring about a clash of mighty forces representing two entirely foreign ways of life.

This is why complacency is so tragic. It is seen in the opposition, centering about Senator Wheeler, against conscription. It is seen in the growing tendency to inject impure politics into the presidential campaign. It is seen in the attitude of the man-in-the-street, who feels that the voting of huge sums of money has insured the safety of this country against any contingency. It is seen in the delay in granting mobilization of the National Guard despite the army's urgent pleas. It is seen in a thousand other different ways, each tragic, each dangerous, each to cost the lives of men, perhaps even the liberties for which their fathers fought. To the west and to the east the enemies of our way of life await the day when his richest of all countries will be forced to stand alone. It then will be too late to act.

The people of this country—all the people—must realize that the soothing predictions of the "experts" and the voting of huge sums of money do not guarantee the safety of the heritage of freedom. If England falls, and it conceivably may, that guardianship will stand a supreme test. The only time this country can prepare is today, while the Bastion of Britain still stands, a lonely sentinel across the waters. One may think today of Francis Scott Key who watched through the night in Baltimore harbor to see whether the flag still flew at dawn. One today may know as thought during that lonely vigil amongst enemies, for today as a nation we watch through civilization's dark night to see whether neither red, white and blue banner yet waves. It is not a pretty picture. But America cannot follow the path of France and England. All that we cherish depends upon the sacrifice of very American to the common duty. It no longer is the duty of the government to the people, but the people to the government. And that duty is no small thing.

Putting all your concrete and steel into a Maginot line and leaving it out of your statesmen isn't clever.

Declaration of Havana

A tremendous victory for human decency and human dignity was won at the Havana conference when the nations of the western hemisphere agreed upon an implementation of the Monroe Doctrine never before thought possible.

That the Argentine delegates were won around to the concept of hemisphere protection envisaged by the United States and most other American countries is probably the greatest victory of all, and it undoubtedly presages a new day of co-operation between Argentina and the United States. It emphasizes the fact that the South American country, so often opposed to purely hemispherical projects, has at last recognized the grave danger faced by all countries of the western world.

The Declaration of Havana imposes new responsibilities for the United States. This country furnished the leadership in the actions of the conference, strengthened its hand and promised to implement that strength with arms and money. This last is implicit in the agreement reached.

The Declaration of Havana means simply that European possessions in this hemisphere will be placed under American protection should it appear probable or possible that they might be ceded to or seized by another European country. Such an act is an act of war. For that reason it must be supported by every country in this hemisphere operating under a new principle of international law.

It means also that the Monroe Doctrine no longer is a unilateral document, but that it comprises a mutual determination of all western hemisphere nations to remain free from the jealousies and the power politics of European and Asiatic countries.

The declaration imposes, for the United States, the duties of maintaining the integrity of all American nations, by force of arms if necessary; of building the economics of the Americas to the needs of the hemisphere and to prevent economic domination by any foreign power, and of convincing these nations in times of stress of the working qualities of democracy. It will not be an easy task.

Sense of Humor?

A new classic of understatement has come to light in a propaganda release of the German Railroads Information Office, which brightly explains that "the reorientation of economic relations on the European continent due to 'recent commercial developments'" is proving a great boon to German sample and trade fairs.

Under the heading of "recent commercial developments," it may be assumed, was the influx into Holland, Belgium and France of numerous traveling salesmen telling an old story in a new way. The samples they took along into these countries, and other countries, were distinctly novel and no doubt aroused great desire on the part of those called upon by these salesmen for some of the same, thank you. At any rate, they immediately called off the "sales resistance" and probably will buy and copy on their own hook many of the articles on display in the hope that some day they might send some traveling salesmen of their own into Germany.

England, of course, has been sending some traveling salesmen by air over Germany, but the trouble with the English is that the Germans seldom have a chance to examine the samples because they have a disconcerting habit of exploding upon contact. To show they keep up with international trade conditions, however, the Germans are now trying to capture the British market.

Who said the Nazis have no sense of humor?

Unhappiest of figures in the old world scene is King Carol of Rumania, with two bosoms. Carol is the one who thought he knew all about living a double life.

Editorial of the Day

JOBS WHEN THEY COME BACK

(From The Christian Science Monitor.)

The man who gives a year out of his career for training in the national defense deserves the opportunity of a job when he comes back to civilian pursuits. Members of the United States senate who have taken an interest in this phase of the pending legislation for compulsory selective service are on a right track. The many business houses which have given assurance that their employees, if called for National Guard or other military training service, will find positions waiting them on return have taken a commendable lead.

This responsibility, however, is not one about which it is practical or perhaps efficacious to set up many rigid, arbitrary requirements. The value of a pledge of re-employment, if it should be exacted by government, will depend largely on the ability of the employing firm to carry it out. Hundreds of enterprises go out of business or change their operations and others come in during any period of a few years. The ending of a war period will see tremendous upheavals, especially in war industries.

The assuring of jobs when men come back from military service is a subject for extensive study and possibly some legislation. But, to be effective, the purpose must be embodied in the fiber of American thinking, adopted as an article of public faith, and accepted as a matter of personal responsibility.

Laws may provide for leaves of absence in the civil service or municipal employment and may strengthen the state employment services to assist with placement in new jobs. But employers should explain to new workers that they may be laid off when men from the service return; unions should protect the seniority standing of the man who is called to the colors; and individual workers should resolve to be ready to make some adjustments at the end of the emergency.

The man who goes into training to defend his country in battle if need be is making a sacrifice for all his fellow citizens. They must be prepared to make sacrifices so as to help fit him back usefully into the community.

Putting all your concrete and steel into a Maginot line and leaving it out of your statesmen isn't clever.

What is the idea of Fascist editors' making up American history as they go along, like so many American party orators?

THE CAPITAL PARADE

By JOSEPH ALSOP AND ROBERT KINTNER.

WHAT HAPPENED TO BULLITT? WASHINGTON, July 29.—Mr. Bullitt appears to be more confusing than explanatory. So far as can be learned from those who have talked with the returned ambassador to France, Bullitt's main argument, supporting his stand in favor of the Pétain government, is that Pétain, Laval, Weygand and company have saved their country from the Communists.

It is reported that Bullitt is extremely eloquent on the power of the Communists in Paris during the days of terror, on the elaborate organization of their activities, and on the serious threat which they constituted. Bullitt is an able observer. A large underground Communist movement still existed in France until the very end of the war. No doubt Bullitt is right that the Communists hopefully came out from their holes during the time when France began to disintegrate. Nor would a Communist threat impress any man more than Bullitt, who has been one of the most violently anti-Communist public men in the world ever since his bitter disillusionment in Russia.

On the other hand, it is also reported that Bullitt is even more eloquent on the present threat of the Nazis to the world than on the past threat of the Communists to France. His anti-Fascism is as nobly intense as ever. It is difficult to imagine that a Communist uprising in Paris or elsewhere in France would not have been cleaned up by the German army and Gestapo in double quick time. And thus Bullitt's plea on behalf of the Pétain government is not explained logically, at least, by his talk of the Communist threat.

Although the Pétain government may have prevented a Communist uprising which the Germans would certainly have put down anyway, the crowd around Pétain are themselves under the gravest suspicion of German domination. The plan to move the seat of government to Paris, now in the hands of the Gestapo, should be indication enough of the grounds for this suspicion. If it is not, there is the known character of Pierre Laval, long classed as a virtual agent of the Italian government and regarded by all informed observers as no better than Georges Bonnet. There is the reputation of Adrien Marquet, a sort of French ersatz-führer. There is the policy followed by the government with regard to the navy, whose independent officers were being replaced by more biddable ones, when the English acted in fear of the new men taking the ships into French ports for German use. These items of evidence, plus the mere shape of the general situation in France, make it perfectly incredible that the Pétain government can be independent in any true sense.

UNOFFICIAL MINISTER Possibly some light may be cast on Bullitt's attitude by the peculiar character of his position in France. He is a romanticist, dashing, brilliant, excitable, given to magnificent hospitality, passionately fond of the stirring goings and comings of international politics. Being so colorful a figure, and known as one of the President's closest intimates, he was accorded a standing in Paris quite unlike that of any other ambassador. Both in the Blum and in the Daladier governments he was an unofficial member of the cabinet. Ministers constantly asked his advice. He was given almost as large a voice in the proceedings of the French foreign office as in the debates of the State Department.

Naturally a lover of good food, good living and all things French, he could not help but grow more pro-French than ever under the influence of his very special relationship with the French government. Occasionally, his Francophilism carried him into indiscretions. For example, in the period before the war broke out, he was sometimes given to telling French officials what the President wanted to do for France. The President, of course, wanted to do everything possible, except actually going to war. And the French officials frequently failed to understand the difference between what the President wanted to do and what the Senate, American public opinion and all the other factors controlling policy would permit him to do.

This same Francophilism undoubtedly influences Bullitt now, for unless the American people are willing to extend a helping hand, France, like all Europe, will have the most dreadful winter since the Thirty Years' War. It is still a question, however, whether natural American generosity, or a hardened consideration of the fact that by helping the French we shall be extending indirect aid to Germany, should control our decision.

ATMOSPHERE OF DISASTER Possibly some light may also be cast on Bullitt's attitude by the conditions which prevailed in France during the last days. Tales that would be incredible if they did not come from such good sources have begun to trickle out. One, for example, is that in the last four days before his fall, Premier Reynaud was really out of touch with Prime Minister Churchill because, trusting no one else, he confided his telegrams to the English prime minister to Mme. Des Portes, who was secretly an appeaser and did not send them. In an atmosphere where such things could happen, it does not seem unreasonable that the head of the French armies, General Weygand, now a leading member of the Pétain government, should have fallen victim to a transport of mysticism. Apparently he combined the conviction that France must now suffer to expunge her great sins, with a strong trace of defeatism and a violent fear of the Communist menace. Bullitt is said, perhaps wrongly, to have been much influenced by Weygand's views.

Bullitt is a responsible official, with much that is excellent in his record, and certainly cannot be condemned out of hand. His stand is puzzling. But, unless he is not ready to defend it in detail, it must be filed calmly in the "fuller explanation" department until he does so defend it.

Talk About The Weather.

One of the best newspapermen I ever knew used to tell us, repeatedly, that a front page story about the weather every day, was not too much on that subject.

"Everybody talks about the weather, it is the one subject of universal, constant interest. And the measure of news value is the degree of public interest. Hence, the weather is always the best news story."

So, it may be pardonable to start this column, this morning, with a reference to the state of the weather.

Yes, begosh, it's hot!

Records at the U. S. weather bureau show considerably higher temperatures have been inflicted on Atlanta and North Georgia in the past. After all, to people who have known thermometers that easily jump above 100, a temperature of 93 or 95 degrees ought to be child's play. But, somehow, the past week has seemed hotter, whether it was or not, than any I can recall. Perhaps it is because the earlier summer was so mild we were temperally unprepared. Or perhaps it's the humidity or something else.

And away he left, shirt still unbuttoned and, once away from the place, resumed his head covering and drove, in comparative comfort, home to Atlanta.

What He Wants to Know.

He told me that both wife and daughter, determined to wrest what little comfort he could from life, with aforesaid wife and daughter, determined to wrest what little comfort he could from life.

With all windows of his car open, he said, the breeze thus created persisted in blowing hair in his eyes. So, he made a masculine version of a snood by tying a knot in the four corners of a handkerchief and stretching it, thus, over his head, to confine his hair.

He was wearing one of those sport shirts that hang outside the pants. He opened it, to the full, and let the breeze blow upon his perspiring, fevered body.

They came to a small town where relatives lived. Wife and daughter objected to his handkerchief snood, so he took it off. They urged him to button his shirt, but he was too hot. He refused, thus revealing his head, after all, a man and not a mouse.

His friend took him to the bathroom and he permitted the cool water to trickle down his body, whether it was or not, that his garments did get wet? It felt delightful.

And he left there, shirt still unbuttoned and, once away from the place, resumed his head covering and drove, in comparative comfort, home to Atlanta.

What He Wants to Know.

He told me that both wife and daughter, determined to wrest what little comfort he could from life, with aforesaid wife and daughter, determined to wrest what little comfort he could from life.

N. Y. Accords Liner America Dizzy Greeting

Merchant Marine Queen Welcomed by Noise in Manhattan.

NEW YORK, July 29.—(P)—The huge new United States liner America—$17,500,000 queen of the American Merchant Marine—arrived today and received a tumultuous city welcome reminiscent of the dizzy, jubilant receptions of the middle '20s.

Boat whistles screamed on half a hundred ships, crowds cheered on the waterfront, multi-colored flags whipped in the wind, airplanes and dirigibles flew overhead, and excursion boats and a marine escort of coast guard cutters and fire boats whipped the harbor into a frenzy.

The gleaming ship—the largest passenger vessel ever built in this country—had an advance welcome far down the bay as she nosed toward her home port from her builders' yards at Newport News, Virginia.

The 500 male guests on the 332-mile trip, which was a preview to the America's maiden voyage from New York August 10 to the West Indies, lined the rails.

The city's accolade to the big liner, which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt christened nearly a year ago, included holiday dress of flags on hundreds of business buildings.

Even taxicabs—nearly 3,000—displayed pennants reading, "Welcome S. S. America."

Army and navy planes circled aloft in formation during the ship's progress to her pier for a greeting by Mayor LaGuardia and Rear Admiral Frank R. Lackey, representing Governor Lehman.

A vanguard welcome committee of 94 prominent New Yorkers hailed the vessel down the bay from the bunting-decked rails of the S. S. Riverside.

Secretary Stimson Gets His First 18-Gun Salute

NEW YORK, July 29.—(P)—Secretary of War Stimson got his first 18-gun salute this morning. Stimson, at the army's Mitchel field, on Long Island, took a plane to Washington.

Field officials thumbed over the regulation books and found that the secretary of war is entitled to an 18-gun salute on entering office, and figured that while they had him handy to some guns they might as well do him the honor.

GOTHAM GREETING—A royal welcome was given the new United States liner "America" yesterday when she sailed into New York harbor on a test run from her builders' yard at

Newport News, Va. The giant ocean queen (left) was greeted by a sightseers' boat (right) providing this study in contrast. Smaller craft, their whistles blowing, churned the waters of

Sanity Test Is Ordered By Judge for Lindsay

By LOUIE D. NEWTON.

A sanity test for J. L. Lindsay, white man charged with murder and scheduled to be tried in Fulton superior court Thursday, was ordered yesterday by Judge Paul S. Ethridge Sr.

Jesse Simmons, attorney for Lindsay, requested the examination prior to the trial. Judge Ethridge appointed Dr. J. C. Blalock, county physician, as one of two doctors to conduct the test. Lindsay is charged with shooting Mrs. Melvins Jarman with a pistol May 13 at her Crew street home.

Good Morning

By LOUIE D. NEWTON.

Judge Samuel H. Sibley addressed the Atlanta Rotary Club some time ago on "Georgia's Wasting Wealth," an address which deserves the careful study of every Georgian. I have read and reread the timely words of this great man. I heard him elucidate his address at a recent meeting of the Ten Club. I wish every daily paper and every weekly paper in Georgia would publish the address in full.

"Our trouble," says Judge Sibley, "is not with our natural resources, nor our financial institutions, nor our factories, nor our transportation systems, nor our merchandising, nor our building operations. These are all holding their own with the rest of the country, and handicaps such as pensions, tariff and freight rate discriminations are in process of adjustment. The raw spot is in our agriculture, with more than half of our people on the farms and over four-fifths of our area involved there. . . . Solve the rural problem in Georgia and you will solve unemployment in the work alone.

"I know at first hand the genesis and growth of the farm problem, because I was born and raised on a Greene county farm, once the garden spot of Georgia. I knew it 50 years ago in a general poverty, so far as money goes. We had plenty to eat and wear, pleasures that satisfied us, when everyone was in the same condition, dependent on our work alone.

"City prosperity and seduction began about that time. The most energetic and ambitious began to move to town. These migrants achieved success in the towns and cities, and their success beckoned to others. Then came the World War and the boll weevil, when 200,000 Negro farmers quit and moved away. Since then the white farmers have gradually lost their land, their market and now their hope. Good roads and automobiles, which ought to have helped, have increased dissatisfaction, moving trade and population to the cities. . . ."

Judge Sibley then goes on to show how much Georgia is spending annually for foodstuff from other states, a total of $27,500,000. He argues that practically all of this foodstuff could have been raised and marketed right here in Georgia.

"Why don't the farmers jump at this? The farmers I am talking about are past jumping. They are not merchants. They have been organized again and again and been betrayed to their sorrow. . . . All they can market is cotton and cottonseed. The same is true of tobacco, though the buyers seem collusive at times. To put the farmers where they can and will take heart, dependable markets must be brought to them."

My space is gone and I haven't touched the hem of the garment of his address. Something can be done about this situation—something must be done, if Georgia makes progress.

WAR COMMITTEE NAMED.
LONDON, July 29.—(P)—War Secretary Anthony Eden appointed a six-man permanent committee tonight to consider revamping the organization and simplifying procedure of both the war office and the military command. Sir Percy Bates, chairman of the Cunard-White Star Lines, heads the committee.

Defense Work Classes Start This Morning

36 WPA Enrollees Will Learn Trades Essential to Armament.

First classes in the vocational training schools of Fulton county for national defense will begin at 8 o'clock this morning at Fulton and Russell High schools, Jere A. Wells, county school superintendent, announced yesterday.

Thirty-six persons on WPA rolls will be entered in three classes of machinists, sheet metal work, and pattern making. Later others will be trained in all types of jobs essential to war defense.

First students, who will attend a six-week course, will be drawn from the WPA and will receive WPA wages while studying but arrangements are being worked out now for persons registered with the state employment offices also to be trained. Other classes with additional students will be started in the country schools within a week or 10 days.

Garment Workers Urged To Support Roosevelt

NEW YORK, July 29.—(P)—Assistant General President Jacob Potosky, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America (CIO), today urged the 100,000 members of that organization to support President Roosevelt for a third term.

In letters to the members, he declared the union took the lead in drafting President Roosevelt, and added that "this is no time to go window-shopping for suitable and willing but untried candidates for President."

F.D.R. Seeks Authority To Call Out Guard

Some Link Proposal With Compulsory Military Training Bill.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—(P) A request from President Roosevelt for authority to order the National Guard and Army Reserve Officers to active training duty was received today by a congress engaged in a deep-seated controversy over the question of compulsory military training.

"The developments of modern warfare are such," Mr. Roosevelt said in a letter read to the senate, "that only seasoned and highly trained troops can hope for success. . . . This group of men who of necessity must be among the first to fight in the nation's defense have a right to the best preparation that time and circumstances permit."

In some quarters, and principally among the opponents of the pending Burke-Wadsworth compulsory training bill, there was an immediate disposition to link

A POINT OF DEFENSE—President Roosevelt made no attempt to withhold his satisfaction yesterday when he visited the Norfolk (Va.) Navy Yard to view new construction during a tour of inspection of defenses there. Admiral M. H. Simons (right), commandant of the Navy Yard, is shown pointing out the progress that is being made in the Yard in connection with the national preparedness program. The President displays a smile of approval, while (left to right) Secretary of Navy Frank Knox and Representative Carl Vinson of Georgia, chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, also look on with interest.

the two proposals. Senator Wheeler, Democrat, Montana, said that if the conscription bill were withdrawn he would be glad to support Mr. Roosevelt's new suggestion.

Meanwhile, Senator Austin, of Vermont, the assistant Republican floor leader, said it was his understanding that if Mr. Roosevelt were given the power requested, the National Guard would be called out to train recruits drafted under the Burke-Wadsworth bill, if the latter were passed.

From Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, the Democratic leader, came a statement that the Guard bill would probably be introduced by Chairman Sheppard, Democrat, Texas, of the Senate Military Committee, and that action would be expedited, in view of Mr. Roosevelt's request for speedy enactment.

Guard Bill First

It was suggested by some legislators, in fact, that the Guard bill might be brought before the Senate ahead of the conscription measure. The leadership was obviously in no hurry to proceed with the latter. An intense controversy has surrounded it, and it was the apparent hope of some that a compromise might be worked out, if the issue is not pressed for a time.

Moreover, President Roosevelt's attitude toward details of the Burke-Wadsworth measure was unknown, and lacking knowledge on that point the leadership was reluctant to proceed. It was thought that Senator Sheppard, cruising with the President over

Norfolk Navy Yard Inspected By Roosevelt

Lauds 'Splendid Work' Under Way in U. S. Defense Program.

NORFOLK, Va., July 29.—(P)—President Roosevelt inspected the navy's largest east coast base and the Norfolk navy yard today, picking up first-hand information on a vital portion of the nation's defense system and commanding the "splendid work" he saw under way.

Disembarking from his yacht, the Potomac, which had brought him from Washington, the President stopped first at the navy yard, where $50,000,000 has been spent and 4,400 workers added since last September.

A 15-mile drive took him to the naval operating base, the headquarters of the fifth naval district and a major supply and operating base for Atlantic units of the fleet. A thousand men at the naval training station staged a formal review before Mr. Roosevelt.

the past weekend, might upon his return tomorrow bring with him some word of the President's attitude.

volt drove slowly through the reservation to view new building activities and scores of naval aircraft lined up wing to wing.

One embarrassed gob, standing at salute, sneezed just as his commander in chief went by.

Rear Admiral Joseph K. Taussig, commandant of the Fifth Naval District, explained activities at the base to the President.

The Potomac had moved down to the base and Mr. Roosevelt went back on board for lunch and a trip across Hampton Roads to Old Point Comfort for an inspection of the army's share of defenses at the entrance to Chesapeake bay.

The afternoon program included visits to Fort Monroe, Langley Field and the privately owned Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Company.

Court Notice Brings Puerto Rican Here

Rafel Rodriquez, of Puerto Rico, is a man who believes in staying on the good side of the law.

Early in June he was arrested, charged with passing a stop sign, and given a summons to appear in court on June 5.

He didn't show up and J. J. McMasters, at traffic court, sent him the routine notice that he was in contempt of court. It went to Emory University where Rodriquez is a student, and Emory forwarded it on to Puerto Rico.

Yesterday Rodriquez walked into Judge Cone's court and told him he was sorry he was a little late. He went home to see his family, he explained, but came back when he got the notice.

The judge dismissed the contempt charges and suspended the $4 stoplight fine.

U. S. Approves BidonHerndon Homes Project

Work Expected To Start August 15 on $1,047,-000 Construction.

United States Housing Authority at Washington yesterday approved a bid of $1,047,000 submitted by the Beers Construction Company for the construction of Alonzo Herndon Homes, final project under the present program of the Atlanta Housing Authority.

Work is expected to begin about August 15, and completion of the 520-unit project is expected within a year though the company is allowed 15 months.

Completion of Herndon Homes will give Atlanta five Negro and three white housing projects, totaling 2,945 units for Negro and 1,850 units for white families. An estimated 20,000 people, 12,000 Negro and 8,000 white, will be housed in the eight projects.

The Herndon project, located across the street from the Southern Railway shops, is named for Alonzo F. Herndon, born a slave, founder of the Herndon Barber Shops, and until his death in 1927

CHICAGO, July 29.—(P)

Wheat and corn prices took an upward course today in a market governed principally by weather and grain storage features of the government farm program, with trade activity throttled by suspense of the European war.

Corn was up as much as a cent at one stage and wheat showed corresponding gains. Corn closed 3-8 to 3-8 higher than Saturday. Wheat unchanged to 3-4 up. Oats unchanged to 1-8 up. Rye unchanged to 1-8 and lard 3-5 lower.

All interests agreed that the outcome of the "Battle of Britain" is the most important factor in the market picture. Thus, pending a decision in Europe, trade has been reduced almost to commercial transactions alone.

Iowa, the nation's banner corn state, central and eastern Nebraska, and most of Minnesota and Wisconsin received good rains yesterday and overnight but moisture missed Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio.

Sugar and Coffee.

SUGAR.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Trade covering in connection with sales of raw steamed domestic sugar futures contracts today saw some considerable price increases compared to one point higher.

The world contract rises in the final hour to lose 1/2 to 2 points. Sales 2 1/2 to 3 1/2 cents per pound. Total 1,000,000 raws due August 13 at 2.66 cents.

Large refiners followed "the move made by Raere of Boston" last week and now are holding delivery bills for fine granulated of 4.35 cents for prompt delivery in place of 4.50 basis and a 15-point allowing and the eastern terminals.

Refiners also followed the Savannah Sugar Refining Company's action by adopting a 4.20 basis for prompt shipment.

Crackers Suffer 3d Straight Loss as Travelers Take Opener, 6-3

BY JACK TROY

Fine Attraction I can wait—especially until something happens to cool things off—but it does seem a swell idea that Georgia is going to open against Oglethorpe under lights at Ponce de Leon park.

If played on Saturday afternoon in Athens, the game might draw fairly well. But only fairly well. At night here, it should attract a terrific crowd.

Georgia's colorful sophomores have attracted the fancy of followers and earned Georgia a "dark-horse" rating. The Sinkwiches, Davises, Blanton, Todds, et al., are real drawing cards.

Largely, the Georgia team this fall will be last year's freshmen grown a year older. There will not be a lot of experience, but it is expected that the boys will take a lot of beating.

Many Atlantans who probably never would have a chance otherwise to see the Bulldogs play will see them this fall because of the decision to play Oglethorpe at night in Mr. Mann's ball orchard.

It is a break, too, for Coach John Patrick. Although he turns out colorful, well-drilled teams, they don't ordinarily play before large crowds.

Larry Not Excited Larry Gilbert, manager of those Vols, doesn't seem to share the feeling in some quarters that Atlanta might catch the league leaders.

Larry wasn't excited prior to the Crackers' collapse in Sunday's double-header against Memphis.

The Vol skipper has an excellent chance to get his son, Charley, back to play center field. Like the others, though, Larry needs pitching more than he needs outfielders.

But he will take Charley back and be glad to get him.

The boy was a real star for the Vols last season.

Meanwhile, the Crackers still could use a pitcher. Not to mention a little good fortune.

Al Retired There have been numerous inquiries lately as to why Al Williams isn't pitching for the Crackers.

Many apparently missed the announcement that the Crackers had turned Al back to Washington more than a month ago.

Williams was given ample time to get ready to pitch, but when he found he couldn't bring his ailing arm around, he gave up for the season.

The Crackers returned him to Washington and Williams, in turn, returned home to Texas. He plans to return to organized ball next season.

Eddie Has Pat Another party wants to know about Pat Petrino, the young collegian who played so well at first base before he was sent out for seasoning by the Crackers.

Pat first was sent to Jacksonville, where he spent most of his time on the bench. That makes the Jax first baseman a nifty ball player.

The Crackers' purpose in sending Petrino out was so that he could play every day. Hence, more than a week ago Petrino was rescued from Jacksonville and sent to Gainesville, where he is playing first under Eddie Moore, former Cracker manager.

Sport Questions

And the Answers

By RUSS NEWLAND.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 29.—(P)—Questions and answers (no mental effort required to play this fascinating game):

Atlantaan Holds Sailfish Lead At Jacksonville

Marcus Cook, of Atlanta, is holding first place in the sailfish division of the annual Jacksonville fishing tournament with a 7-foot 2-inch specimen.

Carl McCall, of Atlanta, captured second prize in the sailfish division of this tournament last year.

Dr. Frank McCormick, Howard Fish and Fred Boardman, of Atlanta, were in the party with Cook when he landed his sail. They all landed barracuda.

Don Meade Fined For 'Easing Horse'

SARATOGA SPRINGS, July 29.—(P)—Jockeys Harry Richards and Don Meade were both fined today for infractions of riding rules during the first program at the Spa.

Richards was fined $100 for "failing to maintain a straight course" in the stretch in the fifth race. He was aboard Dr. Whinny which finished second. Meade was fined $50 for "easing up his mount"—Redlin—in the sixth race before the finish line was reached. The stewards announced.

The Score Sheet

The Crackers folded for the third straight time while Little Rock rode through the sticky night on 14 hits to gain a 6-3 victory. . . . Despite round-trippers by Greenberg and York the Tigers couldn't shake the Athletics' jinx and the league leaders bowed. . . . Big Johnny Mize knocked four runs with triple, double and single as the Cards thumped the Bees. . . . Babe Young's ninth-inning single scored Danning with the run that gave the Giants a 4-3 verdict over the Reds. . . . The Dodgers continued their fistfistic brawls with opponents, but trimmed the Pirates, 7-6, after a six-run spree by the Bucs in the ninth. . . . Arky Vaughan and Babe Phelps bared their knucks. . . . Bitsy Grant took his first-round match in the Meadow Club meet, beating Zan Carver easily.

3-Run Attack Drives Miller Out in Third

Pebbles Touch 4 Hurlers for 14 Hits; Second Game Tonight.

By JACK TROY.

It is just barely possible that the Crackers have forgotten that it takes only so many losses for a team to fall out of second place.

No longer challengers—for the time being, anyway—of firstplace Nashville, the Crackers may have to be brought to life and reminded of the disadvantages of the second division.

Little Rock's seventh-place Travelers moved in last night and Whipped the Crackers with ridiculous ease. The score was 6 to 3.

Jim Prendergast, a talented left-hander, went the route for the Pebbles and, while allowing 11 hits, never had much to worry about.

STILL JINXED.

On the other hand, Larry Miller found that 13th game game a jinx again. He lasted only until the third inning, retiring with a couple of men on and none out. Wayman Kersicks failed to stop "the jinx" and the three runs of that inning, couple with one in the second, were sufficient.

Ed Selway relieved Kersicks and stopped a rally in the seventh. Lefty Burgess finished the game.

The Crackers were pretty lucky that the Pebbles weren't doing any serious hitting. True, they got 14 hits, but they left 14 men on base.

The Crackers' third straight loss in two days dropped them four games behind the idle Volunteers.

HARRIS TONIGHT.

Luman Harris, who has been stopped once in quest of his 13th victory, will be on the hill tonight when the Crackers meet the Travelers in the second game of the series. Alpha Brage is likely to be her Brett's choice.

Hits by Duke, Walters and Irwin produced the Pebbs' first run in the second. Sieling, Yount, Schalk, Duke and Lupien were the prominent figures in the third-inning three-run rally which won the game.

The Pebbs also scored in the sixth and seventh.

The Crackers, lacking timely hitting, scored in the first, sixth and seventh and never made any serious threats to win.

Atlantan Will Take Role In Play With Helen Hayes

• • • WHEN THE Shakespearian drama, "Twelfth Night," opens in New York around December 1, starring the lovely and imperious Helen Hayes, the role of Fabian will be played by an Atlantan, E. Raymond Johnson Jr. And, mind you, he did not seek the part. On the contrary, he was requested to play it—and by the gifted Miss Hayes herself.

"Ray," as he is known to his intimate friends, arrived in the city a week ago to visit his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Johnson, on Brighton road. The Johnsons assembled 150 friends at the cocktail hour on Sunday to meet their son, and there his interesting plans for the winter "leaked out," as, plans have a habit of doing.

"Ray" will return to New York on September 1 to start rehearsing for "Twelfth Night," which will be produced under the direction of the Theater Guild, with Gilbert Miller as co-producer. The last week in October, the play will go on tour for five weeks, in preparation for its Broadway debut early in December.

The talented Atlantan began his stage career seven years ago, during which time he has gained recognition and won many laurels.

He is well versed in Shakespearian roles, his latest having been that of Peter in "Romeo and Juliet," which opened for a brief run in New York last January, with the beauteous Vivien Leigh and Lawrence Olivier in the stellar roles. Previously he toured the country with Maurice Evans as Polonius in "Hamlet."

During the time he was cast in the latter role, Poloway, the famed caricaturist, saw him and thought his character delineation so good that he made a portrait sketch for the New York Herald Tribune. The portrait now hangs in the Johnson home, for Ray Johnson Sr. immediately negotiated for its purchase.

Among Ray's most delightful assignments in the theater was the two years he spent in London, playing at the Old Victoria theater. There he understudied the great English actor, Charles Laughton. More recently he played a small part with Helen Hayes in her great triumph, "Victory Regina."

Before going back to New York, Ray will go to Nashville, Tenn., to spend a week with his grandmother, Mrs. E. G. Johnson.

• • • ALTHOUGH FEMININE visitors usually attract all the admiring attention at parties here, the tables were turned Saturday evening when Frederick Watriss Jr., of New York and Bernardsville, N. The small hostess was assisted in entertaining by her mother and the honor guest's mother, Mrs. Henry.

Chaplin Pays His Stars Regardless Of Work

By Sheilah Graham.

HOLLYWOOD, July 29.—"I Prefer Suspension," says Joan Fontaine, by way of giving emphasis to her refusal to appear in the remake of "Back Street." Joan, as you know, is under contract to David Selznick, for whom she must make three pictures a year, or be paid for them anyway. Selznick has closed his studio until late fall, and when the opportunity came to lend Joan to Universal, agreed on her behalf without the formality of showing her the script. At the moment, Joan is more interested in the idea of family life than in continuing her picture career. I understand that she and husband Brian Aherne are considering adopting a baby.

Charlie Chaplin is still paying Edna Purviance a salary of $200 a week. The last picture Miss Purviance made for Chaplin was "The Woman of Paris," way back in 1923. What a contradictory person Chaplin is. In his private life Chaplin is careful to the point of cautiousness in the spending of his cents and dollars. But at his studio there are about a dozen people who have been on his pay roll for the past 20 years. They collect their checks every Wednesday, every week of the year, regardless of whether they, or Chaplin, are actively working.

Paulette Goddard says, "What's so strange about my dancing with Fred Astaire?" (for "Second Chorus"). Paulette started her acting life as a dancer on the New York stage. And in her first movie, "The Kid From Spain," she was a dancing churro girl. It was in this picture that Paulette attracted the then-roving eye of Chaplin.

Mrs. Liz Whitney has tired of waiting for a film offer, and is now planning to finance her own picture with herself as leading lady and someone like Errol Flynn or Bruce Cabot for her masculine opposite. The picture will be on the horsey side. . . . "It made me very homesick," was Shirley Temple's comment after visiting Deanna Durbin on the "Spring Parade" set. Miss Durbin is currently studying up on the life of Mozart. She says she would like to make a picture based on the life of this composer. . . . Olivia de Havilland and Jimmy Stewart at Chasen's, and Olivia kidding Jimmy on the fact that she is getting more publicity on their romance—which is genuine—than he is. I wonder when Jimmy will pop the all-important question.

Katherine Hepburn races onto "The Philadelphia Story" set. She is on a bicycle, almost collides with Cary Grant, and tells him, "Run away, Cary, run away. I don't want any men around me this morning." Katie is in her usual coming-to-work garb, trousers. In fact, no one has yet seen her in a dress—outside of the picture. I've just heard a revealing story about Marlene Dietrich and her 15- or 16-year-old daughter, Maria. A friend of mine called on Marlene about a year ago. The time was 12 noon. Marlene was walking about on tip-toe, and cautioned my friend, "Shh, Maria's still asleep!" In my day, a girl had to get up for breakfast or she didn't get any lunch.

Nelson Eddy has taken to riding a horse—to reduce. Watch for a new Lana Turner. The gal gives evidence of tremendous dramatic ability in "We Who Are Young." At the moment Lana is in Honolulu, cooling off after her separation from Artie Shaw. She writes that from now on she's going to be a good girl and concentrate on her career only. Jackie Cooper has promised his ma he will not marry for another seven years. Jackie is 17.

This will give you an idea of Jean Arthur's sensitivity. It is broad daylight. Jean is in her trailer (on a recent location jaunt). A passing man is horrified to hear loud sobbing coming from within. He forces the locked door. And finds Jean alone inside, weeping as though her heart would break. "For heaven's sake, what's the matter?" he demands. Between her sobs, Jean tells him, "Two women looked at me through the window." It seems that two Mexican women had peered at Jean, and she is genuinely terrified!

POINTS FOR PARENTS

By Edyth Thomas Wallace.

Julia: "Grandma has my old room but with this day bed in the dining room and a screen around my desk and a dressing table, it's as good as having a room of my own."

Mother: "Grandma, you and Julia can share this room nicely."

Grandmother (to herself): "I'll never have a chance to be alone."

Daughter (to herself): "She'll want to talk when I want to read."

For the sake of both the first and the third generations, they should not be asked to share the same room.

MY DAY: Personal Obligations To One's Country

By Eleanor Roosevelt.

HYDE PARK.—Yesterday Miss Thompson and I started on a full day's recreation. I don't think I prepared for it in the best possible manner, because the night before my son, Elliott, motored up from New York City and because, early in the evening, I had a meeting of the Hyde Park Improvement Association. We did not get started talking until fairly late. At 12:30 he told me he could not spend the night and was driving back to New York City in order to be there for an 8:30 o'clock appointment, so he actually left about 1 a.m.

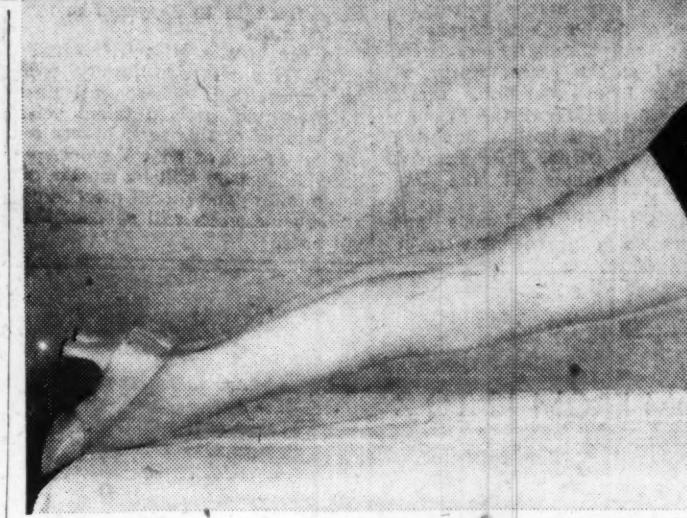

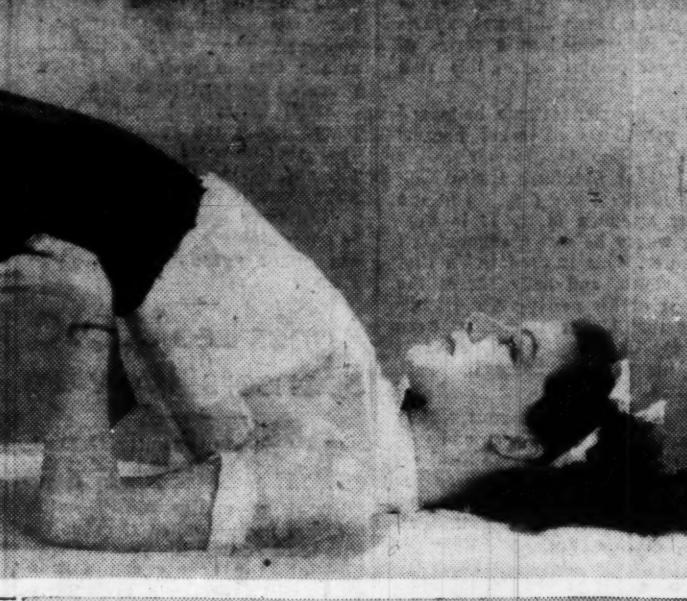

The group left here was still so interested in the discussion we had had with Elliott on our personal obligations to the country at this moment, and what they meant for each and every one of us, that we went on discussing our divergencies of opinion on the matter of compulsory service. Two of the young people present felt that, if the opportunity for service is offered to young people, they will take it so gladly and willingly, it is almost insulting to suggest that it has to be compulsory.

In addition, they felt it would establish a bad precedent to force people to give part of their lives into the hands of the government and that the compulsion will make it an unwilling service. I cannot help but feel that this is a mistaken idea, and my own sons feel as I do. Of course, they are fortunate in that they have not had to sacrifice in order to keep alive during the past few years and they can get a satisfaction in giving, as any of us do who have something to give.

I still feel, however, that this is the democratic way for us, through our representatives, to insist that all of us shall give some service to the nation, and that it shall be specific as to time, place and kind of service. After all, this is only delegating a little more authority over ourselves.

When I read in the newspapers every little of this or that new adherent to Mr. Willkie's cause, recruited supposedly from the ranks of the New Deal, I cannot help but smile. I think I could have named them months ago. They always have been adherents of some cause, but never of the New Deal. I feel like repeating over them all the nursery rhyme:

"Tom, Tom, the Piper's son,
Stole a pig and away he ran.
The pig was eat, Tom was beat,
And ran off crying down the street."

These exercises demonstrated by Ann Sheridan are good posture exercises and also good for the neck muscles and the arms. Lovely Ann is featured in Warner's "They Drive by Night."

Wife Inclined To Interpret Silence as Personal Affront

By Caroline Chatfield.

DEAR MISS CHATFIELD:

Is there any way a wife can make a silent husband talk to her?

JANET.

ANSWER:

Yes, but if she tries to make him talk and succeeds, he is sure to say what she doesn't want to hear. Because it is just infuriating to the silent partner to be prodded into talking as it is to the voluble to be hushed. All of which brings us to the primal point in husband and wife relationships, namely, that neither can make the other over and one that tries it barks the shins and bruises the head and ends up sore and defeated.

A man's tendency to talk or not to talk is something he's born with. Like the color of his eyes it's all settled when he becomes a man and if his wife isn't pleased with the color of his eyes or the flexibility of his tongue she should think of other traits and other features that please her. Whatever things are lovely, pure and of good report it behoves her to think of these things.

Take a girl who's been brought up in a home where everybody speaks his piece, tells what he's done and thought, and the whole family comments and analyzes, approves or criticizes, then marry her to a shut mouth who not only doesn't tell what he's been doing but doesn't give an inkling of what he's planning, and she's thrown for a loop. Unless she knows something about human nature she's inclined to believe that the trouble is with her and her relationship to the husband.

You see it's not so much entertainment the wife craves as it is evidence of her husband's affection, than which there's no evidence so good as confidential conversation. (That is from a woman's standpoint.) So it comes to pass that the wife of the silent partner is in a constant state of wondering, always a little fearful that papa may be talking to somebody else and wondering why that somebody is not herself.

"As far as I know, there are only three ways of a wife's drawing out a silent man without arousing his ire and drawing his fire, and these are not specifics by any means; merely aids to conservation.

First, give him a fine illustration of discretion, never repeating what he says.

Second, show herself sympathetic, never criticizing him, when he unburdens.

Third, refrain from cattching questions which will keep anybody from getting the full story out of anybody. Nobody likes to be cattched. Even the volatile will dry up on you if you push questions at them.

Dr. Brady Advises a Nip Of Iodine for Everybody

By Dr. William Brady.

Once more, observes one of my medical friends—well, anyway a physician who still speaks pleasantly when we meet—you seem to be 10 years ahead of the profession.

The doctor's flattering comment was occasioned by the recent report of the University of Oregon investigators that small quantities of iodine given to expectant mothers produce a greater sense of well-being before their babies are born, easier childbirth, fewer abnormalities or complications of labor, greater success in nursing babies and quicker recovery of normal conditions following childbirth.

When the doctor said I seem to be 10 years ahead of the profession he referred to my advocacy of a nip of iodine for everybody. You know, the Iodin Ration. May be you don't know. If not, then you should know. Send me a stamped envelope bearing your address and ask for instructions for Taking the Iodin Ration. (Iodin is my way of spelling iodine—and I'm going to stick to it).

Modesty, believe it or not, constrains me to say that I have never urged expectant mothers to take the Iodin Ration, although I do say, in the booklet, "Preparing for Maternity" (for copy send 10 cents in coin and stamped envelope bearing your address), "In most places, especially where goitre is common, the expectant mother may well take a suitable iodine ration throughout pregnancy."

Long experience has proved that this is harmless, even when iodized salt is used instead of plain salt in the household."

When an expectant mother asks whether it is safe for her to take the Iodin Ration I refer her to her own doctor. Now that the profession is catching up, perhaps I need not bend so far backward in deference to the amanies of medical ethics.

But I make no bones of assuring expectant fathers that a nip of iodine two or three times a week is nearly always beneficial, and as for expectant grandfathers, it really helps them to stay in the game and to get more joy out of life.

The thyroid gland regulates metabolism. Metabolism is the oxidation process, life, the sum of the chemical processes by which nutrition is maintained. A little iodine is necessary for normal functioning of the thyroid gland.

In a few regions of the country possibly there is still enough iodine in the soil and water to supply enough to animals and people who drink the water and eat the foods grown on the soil. In most regions the iodine has been taken from the soil and carried in streams and rivers down to the sea, so that there is not quite enough left to supply animal and human requirements in the ordinary way. Foods from the sea are rich in iodine, but in many parts of the country people do not get enough sea food.

First, give him a fine illustration of discretion, never repeating what he says.

Second, show herself sympathetic, never criticizing him, when he unburdens.

Third, refrain from cattching questions which will keep anybody from getting the full story out of anybody. Nobody likes to be cattched. Even the volatile will dry up on you if you push questions at them.

CAROLINE CHATFIELD.

WOMAN'S QUIZ

Q. How can I keep my elbows light colored and soft?

A. Each night, before retiring, soak them in warm water a few minutes and then place them in small bowls of lemon juice. Rub well with toilet lanolin and wipe off lightly.

Q. What can be used to clean rubber goods?

A. Water and mild soap are usually sufficient. Gasoline swells and deteriorates rubber on prolonged contact, but there is no objection to wiping the surface of a rubber article with a cloth moistened in gasoline or carbon tetrachloride to remove an obstinate stain, provided it is done quickly, and the solvent is allowed to evaporate at once.

Just think, no more fires to build, no more coal to handle. Yes, that's exactly what you have with Moncrief automatic heat in your home. In addition to relieving your wife of the drudgery of shoveling coal, your house stays comfortably heated with the temperature thermostatically controlled . . . and best of all, you enjoy these Moncrief comforts at a surprisingly low cost.

Good Posture and Regular Exercise Avert Hump on the Nape of the Neck

By Ida Jean Kain.

That hump at the nape of the neck may have started in your schooldays when you bent over your algebra—but it still isn't a bump of knowledge! Later on, you make matters worse by knitting, reading and working with the head tilted forward—and blame it on age.

But if you have a hump there, you are not as interested in its start as you are in its finish, so we'll give the cure first, then the preventive.

There are only a few exercises which work. Any number of exercises get those particular muscles into action, but most of them increase the tendency to a forward head and neck. A bad example is one in which you lie on the back and raise your head to look at your toes.

Exercises in which the head is pulled back are best.

1. Position: Lying face downward on the floor, arms down at sides.

Movement: Keeping the arms straight, clasp the hands behind the back, and forcibly contract the back, shoulder and neck release. Repeat six times.

2. Position: Lying on the back on the floor, stretched to full extension.

Movement: Keeping the back of the head on the floor, arch the back, and contract the back muscles to lift the shoulders slightly off the floor. Hold and release. Repeat four times only.

3. Position: Standing erect but at ease.

Movement: Hunch the shoulders up about the ears, then rotate back, down and around. The rotation should include the entire shoulder girdle.

4. Position: Stand facing a wall, chest and toes touching the wall, chin level.

Movement: Keeping the chest against the wall, the chin level, pull back with the head. This exercise has the added advantage of reflexly contracting the abdominal muscles.

But prevention is better than correction any time. The way to prevent this teddy bear hump is to make good posture a habit. Never let your head poke forward. Try to keep the back of the neck in as straight a line as possible. If you maintain that line, the chin is level, the chest and lower abdominal wall are lifted, and the figure is in correct alignment.

THE MORTAL STORM

Dr. and Mrs. Roth Believe Freya And Rudi Should Go to America

By PHYLLIS BOTOME.

SYNOPSIS.
En route to the Maberg estate to recuperate after an illness that followed the murder of her Communist lover, Emil, Freya and Rudi attempt to flee Germany from the Nazis. Freya finds her stepbrother, Emil von Rohn, who is driving an armored truck. She learns that Emil, as well as Amelie, their mother, knows that it was Freya's older Nazi stepbrother Olaf who carried out the order. Olaf and his men are at present held in forced prison—guilty for killing Hans, but for doing so on their own initiative and against Nazi discipline. At the Maberg home, Dr. and Mrs. Roth believe Freya's mother, shrewdly guesses the truth despite the version told her by her husband, the Graf Ulrich. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

INSTALLMENT XLIV. 6

"Father," Freya said at last, "it is three months now! Would it be safe for me to visit them on the Wetterstein?"

Her father took out his pipe and gave her his whole attention.

"I could not tell you much about my visit to them in a letter," he began cautiously; "all our letters are liable to be opened; but what I did tell you was true. Your friends there were well! They were going on with the business of life. Harris' mother had her grief in her eyes but she had much work to do, and her good son Karl helps her. All were eager for news of you and understood fully why you could not yet visit them."

"I took Rudi with me, it was his wish and I thought it could do him no harm. He is old enough now to keep a still tongue in his head. Michel showed him all the animals and Rudi was happy there. It is not very easy for him now in Munich. Your mother and I are thinking, Freya, that perhaps it might be best to send you both out of this country. I want you to turn this project over in your mind, without fear! No! We could not come with you. If I leave my post—my friends and fellow doctors—I should feel myself a deserter. Your mother, too, has her other two sons to think of—if she left them, it would have to be a final parting. I think we have no right to ask this of her. Not yet, at any rate! I am having Rudi specially taught English out of school hours, and I advise you to brush up yours. It is to America that you should go. We have my nephew Roth in New York, but he is young and does not perhaps remember us very well. My sister Hildegard, however, in Los Angeles, although it is many, many years since we were together—and we had little in common—has a loyal heart. She could take you into her house, and the University of California is free, you could take your doctorate there and become an American citizen."

"I am making all inquiries beforehand, since they involve us in nothing and we might have to act speedily. The government has sequestered my private fortune; I am now a poor man, my mother has nothing. This matters very little. I have my pension, and the house is our own. We can live more simply. Still, it concerns you, since you were to have a good 'dot' and now you will have nothing but what you earn. This will make your future in this country more difficult!"

"I shall earn my living," Freya answered promptly, "wherever I am—and I shall never marry. But also I shall not leave you and mother—that cannot be necessary!"

Her father smiled. "Necessity is beyond our control," he said gently. "We must bow to her—not she to us! There is one more thing to tell you—that is also not very nice, but when that is over, we can enjoy ourselves. The Nazis have requested your mother to leave me. She is not forced—but she is warned; if she refuses, she will be suspect, and must live under their displeasure. Perhaps I need not tell you that she did refuse!"

"Father! Father!" Freya cried agast. "How can they do such things? How can they make us lepers? What have we done—as a race—to turn this mad dog on us? Why do other Germans in authority bear it? Surely all are not mad?"

"No! No!" said her father. "All are not mad, but you must remember the Germans have slow brains, and are a timid people, otherwise they might not work so well, and might also care so much for militarism, to defend them. People who are timid do not need great armies! Our Jewish race has a certain ruthlessness and separate intelligence that the Germans may well envy. Also are small unarmed remnant, and such a remnant, within their gates, is very easy to mishandle. The Germans are a discouraged people—shaken by defeat—they have seen Russia, their greatest neighbor, destroy her capitalists, not unsupported by our timid bourgeoisie always unaccustomed to think or act for themselves—have seized the power they need against a revolution. Hitler—a working man himself—fooled our working classes for them. And continues to fool them. This is a great service, and it has been greatly rewarded. Who stood in their way? Communists who wanted revolution and Jews—who are always internationalists and in favor of peace! Upon us then they try out their power—we are their Verschukanichen! From their point of view, they do very well to persecute us both!"

Freya drew a long frightened breath.

"Father," she asked, "must we always live under their heel? Will they always despise and hate us? It is as if we were in a state of war against our own brothers!"

"But it is war!" her father said, rising and putting out his pipe. "It is war to exterminate the brotherhood of man! And it will survive since it is an eternal principle, and not subject to torture or execution. There is no mine that can permanently explode the heart of man. Nor yet a poison gas that can stop the breath of God, that has created the spirit of man. As soon as men learn to love each other faithfully in spite of danger, we shall recover security and peace!"

Freya rose slowly and heavily to her feet. "You are tired, my child," her father asked her anxiously. "More tired than I have ever seen you! That is curious in this fine air! We will soon find out how the work goes, and then you must amuse yourself a little more. For we Jews have that within ourselves that survives disaster."

They walked up the rest of the hillside, talking of indifferent things.

Nobody was there to meet them at the iron gates; only the dogs barked their vociferous welcome. The pigeons on the roof rose in a great flurry of silver wings, high into the colorless evening air, sinking back a moment later, one by one, to their accustomed places, with a nonchalance as unanimous as their panic.

The Graf had gone up the mountain to inspect a reservoir and had not yet returned; the Grafina was still playing bridge in her boudoir and could not be disturbed. Sophie was at her dresser.

Finding out that her father was thirsty, Freya ran to fetch him a glass of water from the well in the courtyard.

Continued Tomorrow.

Says Okefenokee Road Would Bring Motorists to Nature.

Charlton County Herald, down at Folkston, says State Highway Department has had a crew surveying a road across the famous Okefenokee swamp.

Great idea. There's always been a charm about Okefenokee. I spent a day down there a couple of summers ago and it was worth sitting on a hard board in a skiff until my spine collapsed.

No reason why such a road shouldn't have big appeal to tourists. The tall cypresses which remain after the logging companies were through. The sluggish creeks winding in and out. The water hyacinths and pond lilies by billions. The ospreys soaring overhead, intent upon a fish. The turtles sunning themselves on floating logs. The occasional alligator, slumping into the depths as a boat approaches. The copper-hued water, dyed by decaying vegetation.

You may say that all animal life will disappear from the vicinity of the highway. Not so. The motorist is in a hurry. He likes to look for turtles and alligators but he doesn't want them cluttering up his car.

The animals and birds will be scared off—for a time. But they'll come back.

Tourists in the west say the bears of Yellowstone and the Yosemite have become nuisances, begging and grabbing for food from passing automobiles.

I hope the state can make a deal with the government—which holds most of Okefenokee as a wild life preserve—so the road across the swamp can be built. It will bring a lot of motorists closer to nature's heart.

Nix on Carrots.

Associated Press writer reports that Abit Nix dislikes raw carrots and won't eat 'em. If Mr. Nix and I can confer and come to an agreement on spinach and parsnips I might swing my influence in his direction.

But I am wavering in the balance. Story says Nix is "fond of a quiet life," sometimes takes a nap after the midday meal after "turning on the radio full blast," which soothes him. If he were in my household I'd soothe him with a baseball bat, provided I could find one. And the rest of us might have a quiet life.

On the other hand, Mr. Nix delights in detective stories, after the toil of the day is over. I'm with him on that. I never try to solve for myself the problem of who slew the belted Earl of Starved-ares and I never cheat by peeking at the last chapter. If Mr. Nix can convince me he's also a noncheater I'll forgive him his radio. After all, I can't hear it all the way from Athens.

But, I may as well confess, the item that bound me to Nix with hoops of steel, as the poet says, was his open declaration that his personal star of the film universe is Myrna Loy.

Me, too! And that, if he had no other fine qualities, proves to me that Mr. Nix is a gentleman of more than ordinary perspicacity and most excellent taste. I hope he organizes a Myrna Loy Admiration Society with himself as president and myself as secretary.

I understand a secretary's position invariably carries a salary.

Mr. Camp's Poems.

Ernest Camp, editor of the Walton Tribune at Monroe, announces a new volume of his poems, to be published soon. He has published two such books and by those, his excellent weekly and assiduous attention to his job printing business he is several jumps ahead of the sheriff. Indeed, I heard the income tax people were asking about him.

I'm not an addict of poetry but I do like Ernest's stuff. As I do Hickey's. And Ollie Reeves'—though Ollie offers me no poetry—just verse. There's a difference.

Sandersville Progress has a rural correspondent from Riddleville. My inquiring mind naturally turned over a few revolutions and wondered: "Why Riddleville?" But it hasn't yet got the answer.

Carey Williams of the Greensboro Herald-Journal—if that's right, because we always get it mixed up with Jack Williams' Journal-Herald, down in Waycross—is still successfully syndicating his column of paragraphs about this and that. He remarked this week that idle chatter is when a man makes a thrift talk to his family.

Lovely lady in society department, seeking fashion item, was calling up swell shop to inquire about furs.

I removed my coat, loosened my collar and in a burst of ardor offered to buy her a fur coat right then and there if she'd wear it, on the hoof, from Five Points to Baker street. The thermometer was basking around 94.

"Will you make it sables?" she asked, sweetly. "If so, I'll wear it all the way to Buckhead—and walk in the car tracks."

I said sables or skunk were all the same to me. I never consider costs.

"Just pick it out and tell the man to charge it to me," I offered. "Oh," she replied, "I thought there was some catch in it."

Federal Seed Act Goes Into Effect on August 9

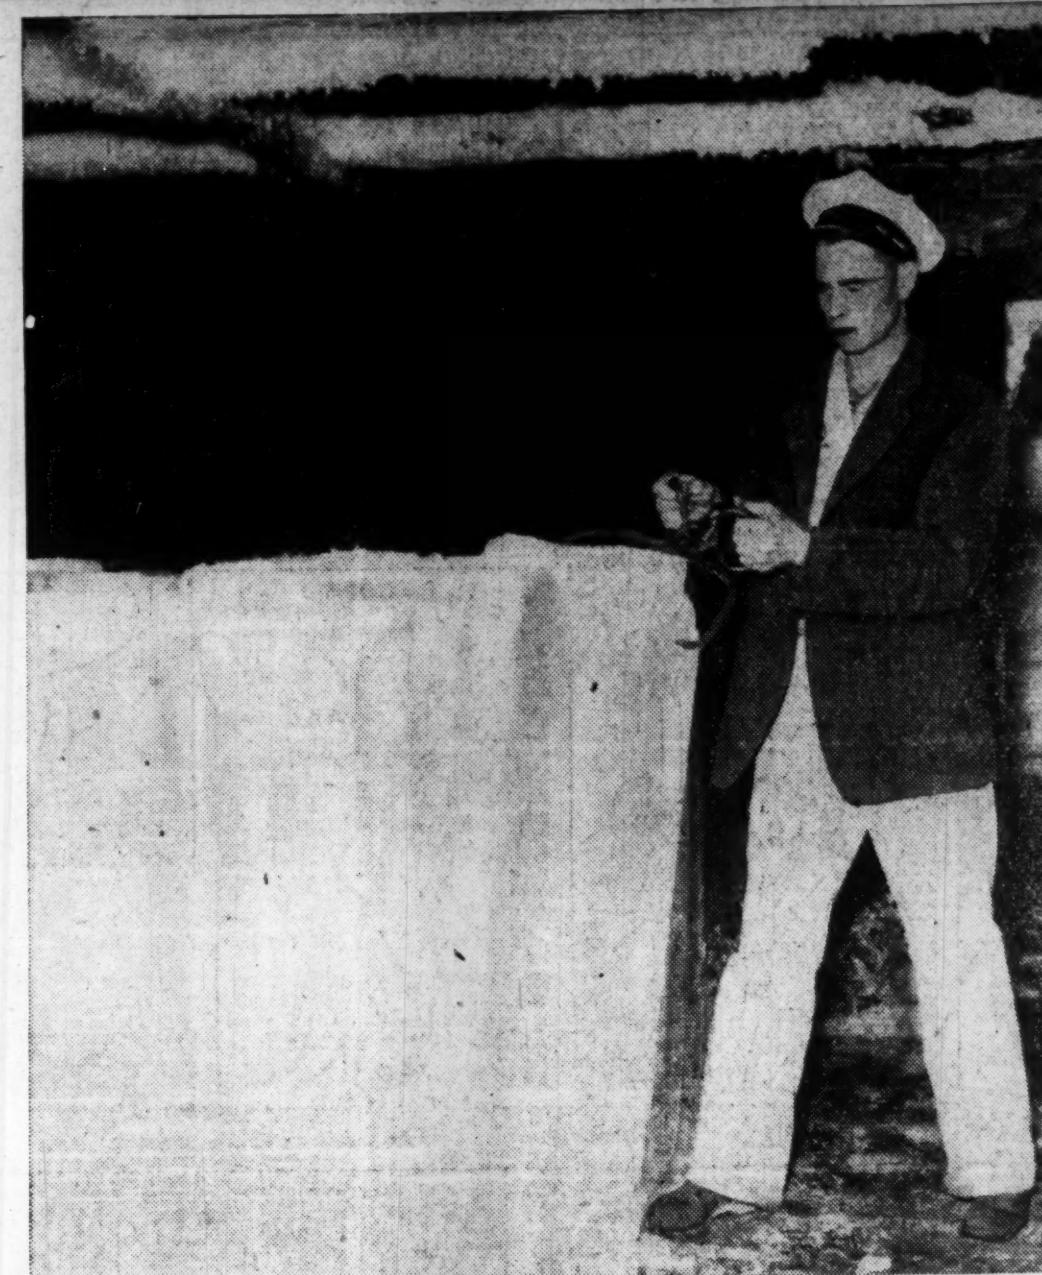

Vegetable seed shipped in interstate commerce after August 9 must be handled in accordance with requirements of the federal seed act, designed to protect planters against low germinability, the Agricultural Marketing Service reminded shippers today.

The seed "must be properly labeled, honestly advertised, and honestly represented in every way," the Marketing Service said, "so the label will tell the buyer what he needs to know when he buys seed."

Heat No Novelty to These Men

HOT? C. E. Mullenax (left) and T. H. Smith don't seem to think so. They're playing nursemaids to an Atlanta steel furnace, and the mercury's in the 90's outside, but the two are still fully sweatered and coated.

PRETTY SOFT these days is the job of Roy Jenkins, who labors among frosty surroundings at an ice plant. Though fellow Atlantans are melting like ice cream in a frying pan, Roy finds it pleasant to wear a coat as he plays with overgrown ice cubes.

CLAMOR is the goal of Betsy Hopkins, 11, as she enters a beauty parlor here.

EARLY in the process of giving a permanent wave, the beauty operator parts off strands of hair, which she forms into sections. Then she wraps each part in paper after thoroughly padding it, and twists it around a roller. That is exactly what Operator Carolyn Taylor is doing here to Betsy Hopkins, who has come seeking a bit of grownup glamour.

AN ESSENTIAL STEP in this business of permanent waving is that of drying. In fact, after almost every other step in the process, the hair must be dried. In this photo (one of a series by Carolyn McKenzie) Betsy Hopkins is shown cooling and drying after having her hair steamed as a glamor builder-upper.

ACCENT ON GLAMOR Can this be our little Betsy Hopkins, this lovely young thing of smiles and modishly ringleted hair? But of course! No longer, however, is she a child or drooping locks, for beauty parlor alchemy has transformed her into a youthful but sparkling "glamor girl." (Story on Page 6)

Says Weather Change Expected in England Within 6 or 8 Weeks.

Time is so important in the battle of Britain that the lapse of 10 days since Adolf Hitler's "last-chance" peace move without a wholesale onslaught on England is causing wide conjecture.

Hitler himself noted in his recent speech that bad weather had been a major consideration in forcing postponement of the Nazi west front attack from September, 1939, until the spring of 1940. There remain of this year only six or eight weeks within which Germany could expect to complete her victory without facing the same weather difficulties that held her almost inactive from September, 1939, to the spring of 1940.

That being the case, it is difficult to fathom Hitler's reasons for withholding his final attack on England this long. His last-chance "appeal to reason" speech of July 19 committed him so completely to a devastating attack without delay that failure to launch it soon would seriously impair his prestige.

Looking back over the available texts of the Hitler speech of July 19, it can be argued that he was expecting the preliminary air campaign against England to achieve far more decisive results than seem yet to have been attained. He scoffed at Britain's claims that she was turning out planes at an accelerating rate and thus strengthening her defense to the point of successful resistance.

Hitler and Hens.

"It is not necessary for us (Nazis) to multiply every airplane that is built by five or by 12, and then broadcast it to the world," he said. "Even for a hen it is not very clever to announce in a loud voice every egg she is about to lay."

Ten days later, however, the British "hen" is cackling furiously of the achievements of those airplane "eggs," telling of Nazi bombers brought down and of more than 1,000 bomber raids on German targets since June 18. It is questionable whether the Nazis engaged in aerial raids on England and on British shipping today quite as confident as Hitler was 10 days ago that British boasts were so far from the truth.

Hitler did a bit of cackling himself about German plane production, saying that battle equipment destroyed or worn out in France and the Low Countries had been "completely insignificant" and that the output of new equipment was so vast it had to be curtailed for lack of storage space.

Clearly, then, it is not shortage of material that is holding up the German blitzkrieg; nor can the Germans have any doubt about British rejection of the kind of peace Hitler offered, or any other kind short of British victory. There is an increasingly confident note in British reports of air battles, constantly rising claims of Nazi aircraft shot down and airmen captured.

England itself is an island fortress with something like 5,000 miles of seacoast. It is quite a long hop even by fastest airplane from end to end of the island, from Land's End to John O'Groats, as the old saying goes. Yet it is only 300 miles across the island east and west at its widest point, less than hundred at its narrowest.

5,000-Mile Perimeter.

Working inside that 5,000-mile perimeter, the fighter squadrons of the Royal Air Force have a very distinct advantage, or which they obviously are making the most. Every German bomber flight inshore brings a swarm of fighter Hornets about it from all directions. That is helping equalize the odds.

Malta, the dot of an island in the Mediterranean, 60 miles off the coast of Sicily, is another item of British encouragement. It has been under close range Italian air attack ever since Italy entered the war early in June. Scores of raids have been reported on this tiny target, 17 miles long by 9 miles wide; yet it still holds out.

Within days the reopening of motion picture houses there has been reported. It would take an Italian invasion to reduce even that British outpost, apparently, and for some reason that has not been attempted.

Hitler has indicated full confidence of conquering England within hours or days, once he loosened his legions against her. If the fight goes on for weeks instead, and an early winter closes down on it, he is destined to lose more than his reputation as a minor prophet.

Lieutenant Abell Called to Service

First Lieutenant Alan M. Abele, of the Marine Corps Reserve, has received orders to report August 11 at Marine Barracks, Parris Island, S. C., for active duty of indefinite duration.

For the past 11 years Lieutenant Abele has been a member of the editorial staff of the Press in Atlanta. He was granted a leave of absence for military service.

The Parris Island base at present is one of the centers of training operations for the special mobile defense force being organized by the Marine Corps.

HOUSING APPLICATIONS. Rome, Ga., July 29.—Applications are being received from prospective tenants of Altoview terrace, Negro housing project in East Rome, according to M. I. Frost, general housing manager for Rome's two big low-rent housing projects. Altoview Terrace is one of the smallest federal housing projects in the south.
